I came to Japan six months ago. Now I know that there are many differences between schools in America and schools in Japan.

In America, I usually brought my lunch from home to school. It was always sandwiches and some fruit. Sometimes I bought lunch at the school cafeteria. My favorite was cheeseburger and French fries with chocolate milk. In Japan, I never bring lunch from home because I eat kyushoku. It is good for my parents because they don't have to make lunch for me on busy mornings. However, it is not good for me because every student eats the same food, and I cannot choose* my own lunch. Also, I should not leave* any food on the plate when lunchtime is over*. I often have to eat carrots, onions, and beans... I just don't like them! I hope there will be some American foods too in kyushoku.

Another difference is that we have to clean our classroom every day and sometimes even the restrooms*! In America, students never do that because each school has janitors*, and they do all the cleaning. My teacher in Japan tells me that cleaning by ourselves is important to learn two things. One is that we should use things in the right way and should not make a mess*. The other is that we need to work together to finish a task. Cleaning is a good chance to learn to help each other. Well, I understand his words, but I just don't think cleaning is fun. I want to play outside when all classes are over.

I miss my school in America. I need some more time to get used to* these differences.
